Trailblazers: 100 years of excellence

A pioneer of archaeology in the UK, we celebrated our centenary in 2020. Today, our archaeology experts bring new discoveries and latest thinking into every-day teaching. What's more, we are training the next generation of conservators, preserving precious heritage at home and overseas.

Big horizons, bigger community

The opportunity to learn about so many different cultures is one of my favourite things about the school, and I think one of its biggest strengths as well. The close-knit community we have here has been a massive factor in how much I've enjoyed my time in Cardiff. There's a really great relationship between different subjects within the school, as well as between different year groups, levels of study, and students and lecturers.

MJ Spencer, Ancient History (BA)

Cardiff University is a great choice. You'll have the best school that listens to your needs and lecturers that support you in your studies. You'll find friends for life here; the Students' Union is one of the best in the country and is the most fun thing to do beside your studies. If you choose Cardiff, it'll become your home away from home.

Returning to education?

Discover our Exploring the Past programme, designed to bridge the gap to studying at degree level for those considering a degree later in life.

Our story – making a difference

Curious about the human experience, across millennia and cultures, we are seeking to better understand our past to illuminate our present and improve our future.

Bringing together history, archaeology, conservation and religion, we find, we interpret, and we preserve.

We are the future guardians of heritage, and we conserve that which shaped today's world – the narratives and the artefacts. This is our mission and informs our research, teaching and engagement.

Become part of that ambition and make a lasting difference.

Boundary-breaking innovation

We are making our mark in academia and beyond, positively impacting communities on our doorstep and around the world. Our flagship programmes are inspiring new generations to be passionate about history and archaeology.

- Our trailblazing Guerrilla Archaeology initiative is made up of archaeologists, scientists and artists dedicated to bringing the past alive. Created in 2011, we've attended more than 50 festivals and encouraged over 100,000 people to 'dig the past' allowing them to find their own truth within the past and establish their own relationship with it.

Guerrilla Archaeology

- Our SHARE with Schools programme is reaching young minds in schools and breaking down barriers to higher education. Our students deliver inspiring workshops in schools, gaining valuable classroom teaching experience.

SHARE with Schools

Community collaboration

We are proudly rooted within our local community in Wales, with particularly strong links in the heritage sector, notably our longstanding partnership with Amgueddfa Cymru - Museum Wales. These roots are also reflected across the spectrum of world faiths within our cosmopolitan capital city, a melting pot of citizens through its industrial and maritime history.

Our Hidden Hillfort Project has harnessed heritage to reshape the future of an inspirational community in collaboration with local charity Action for Caerau and Ely, thanks to major Heritage Lottery Fund support. From its beginnings as the CAER Heritage Project, it remains firmly rooted in the community, becoming a multi-award-winning national beacon for engagement and research in partnership.

Generating impact

Our diversity of subject matter and breadth of expertise leads to wide-ranging research impact. Our conservators saved the SS Great Britain from the ravages of rust while our research has helped us to understand how Welsh migrants' identity changed as they adapted to Welsh cultures, and we've provided the evidence needed to improve pastoral care for Muslims in public institutions.

Today our work is helping to start conversations within society. For instance, 3-year research project Researching British Imams is transforming understanding and creating a lasting reference point for future research on Muslim religious professionals.

Rich resources, bespoke facilities

Most lectures, practicals and tutorials take place in the John Percival Building. Just next door is the Arts and Social Sciences Library, home to extensive collections and archives in archaeology, ancient history and history plus a wide variety of primary sources for world religions. Here you can explore our prestigious Special Collections, from British cabinet and United Nations papers to the exquisite Cardiff Collection of 14,000 rare and antiquarian books.

Archaeology and conservation facilities at your fingertips

Our home building includes purpose-designed and specialist conservation and archaeological laboratories. With over a million pounds of recent investment in our facilities, and more to come, our laboratories hold an impressive range of specialist equipment for research and teaching.

Our students have access to both our expertise and our facilities, including our illustration and photography studios, conservation suites, bioarchaeology laboratories and reference collections.

Explore our facilities, introduced by our experts

Field trips

Archaeology trips regularly include visits to sites of international significance from world-famous Stonehenge to sites of special interest here in Wales, from the Neolithic right up to the medieval. Close to hand are the dazzling collections of Museum Wales, and we regularly run trips to major centres like the British Museum. Thanks to the Cyril Fox Fund, archaeology and conservation students may apply for travel grants to relevant sites, with a similar facility for ancient history.

Did you know?

The heritage sector makes a massive contribution to the UK economy, creating thousands of jobs.

Take commercial archaeology. Conducted ahead of infrastructure projects, this fundamental work is thriving across the UK. In its 2019 report, Historic England reported an injection of 31 billion pounds and a massive 464,000 jobs in England for that year alone.

Studying two subjects

Combine subjects from within the school or with other humanities disciplines.

Our joint honours and integrated degree programmes give you the opportunity to study 2 subjects in one degree.

Choose subjects you already love or introduce something completely new, unlocking greater knowledge, enhanced skills and varied career pathways.

Opening up your world

Studying abroad is an opportunity to broaden your horizons, explore new cultures and develop an understanding of different customs and practices.

You'll find you develop in unexpected ways and may learn a new language too!

Recently, students have enjoyed the international outlook this offers at partner universities in Europe (in countries like Italy, Germany and Norway) and further afield in Canada, Hong Kong and the USA.

How does study abroad work?

You spend your third year at an approved partner institution thanks to our exchange programmes with overseas universities. You return for your final year in Cardiff.

If you're interested in this option, and your programme of study means you're eligible (some joint honours programmes with subjects outside the school aren't included) then you apply in year 2. Check our website for the latest information.

I spent an entire year at the University of Connecticut, studying US and Native American history where it all happened. It was a truly incredible opportunity!

Enfys Evans, English Literature and History (BA 2017)

Languages for all

Opening up a world of new destinations, inspiring cultures and exciting career options, our Languages for All and Welsh for All programmes are free to students.

Arabic, French, German, Italian, Japanese, Mandarin Chinese, Portuguese, Russian and Spanish are currently on the list. With Welsh lessons offered as a separate scheme, allowing you to explore and engage with the rich diversity of the Welsh language and Welsh culture.

Real-world opportunities

Optional practical fieldwork and community volunteering opportunities offer ways to explore topics and their relevance in a more focused environment. Across our diverse city, our students have contributed to the university's civic mission projects - in Ely and Caerau.

Our students also continue to enjoy volunteering in the SHARE with Schools project, gaining valuable classroom experience.

Student societies for every taste and new experiences

There are over 200 student societies for you to discover at our vibrant Students' Union.

Our students lead the hugely popular History Society - with trips at home and overseas - and run a packed programme for the Ancient History, Archaeology and Conservation Society.

Sports, faith, environment, activism, politics: there's so much on offer. Hands-down the best way to make the most of university - and lifelong friends. Dive in!

Kickstarting your career

We take your employability seriously and encourage you to consider your future and career ambitions early in your studies so that you'll be on the fast-track to success.

The university's Student Futures team provides support with career planning throughout your studies and after graduation, including what to do with your degree, job hunting and recruitment. This also opens up a number of placements in a range of exciting sectors for you.

You'll have access to a programme of work-based activities to boost your skills and knowledge, plus advice to help build your CV and your competence in the job application process. This will help you present yourself in the best light and land your first graduate-level job.

Giving you the edge: real-world experience

We can support you in obtaining work experience, internships and graduate jobs. Our credit bearing employability module – offered in year 2 – gives you a further chance to undertake a work placement and improve your career planning.

Insight into industry sectors

We draw on our networks to offer insightful industry-focused opportunities, from sector-focussed sessions with relevant experts to informative guest talks in spheres like publishing and heritage. You'll have the chance to gain further insights into careers, current job market trends and professional environments in a range of activities, with our alumni also offering their top tips and invaluable expertise too.

Degrees with employability built in

All our degree programmes are designed to increase your employability and to develop the key skills needed in graduate level careers.

You'll practice intellectual self-reliance, evolve the ability to process information and make considered judgements, and evidence a willingness to seek solutions, alongside core transferable skills like communication, team-working, time management and strength in information and communication technologies.

Real-world archaeology and conservation placements

Not only do our archaeology and conservation degrees offer specialist training for careers in the heritage sector, they also give you the insight of our respected experts, all working in close collaboration in the field in the UK and beyond.

More than this, these programmes all include 8 weeks of practical experience spread over the summers before year 2 and year 3, be that on excavation or in museums and units within the heritage sector.

For us, this hands-on, assessed experience is vital for your development and a real taste of our professions in action. So, unlike most universities in the UK, these placements are fully funded by the school. Hands-down, our graduates tell us this is the most memorable aspect of the degree too.

Volunteering: expanding horizons, gaining skills

Across our diverse, compact capital, our students have contributed to the university's civic mission projects - in Caerau and Ely in the CAER Heritage project. Optional practical fieldwork and community volunteering opportunities offer ways to explore topics and their relevance in a more focused environment.

Teaching tasters

Classroom experience is a great option if you're thinking about teaching as your next step. As a school we have pioneered our SHARE with Schools project, offering you both the chance to get into the classroom and share your passion for history, archaeology or religion. It's a double win, as we aim to broaden horizons of local pupils from diverse and less privileged backgrounds to aim for higher education too. Participants, past and present, highly rate this experience for enhancing their skill set beyond teaching, especially for public engagement and communication.

And there are more opportunities in the university's Classroom Experience project, providing voluntary experience in selected local schools.

What do our graduates do?

Our graduates pursue a wide range of careers, with alumni typically forging careers in heritage, creative and not-for-profit sectors and making an impact in distinguished fields of their choice, be that business, journalism, marketing and PR, teaching, the civil service, the armed forces or the law and many more.

Ancient History

Explore ancient civilisations over two millennia, stretching from ancient Greece and Rome to Mesopotamia, Iran and beyond.

Ancient history is rooted in the humanities, but we are informed by the sciences too, with archaeology revealing more and more from our ancient heritage. Unlike many universities in the UK, we are investigating ancient worlds far beyond Greece and Rome, and from the fall of the Egyptian New Kingdom to the rise of Islam.

With us, you'll discover the world of antiquity through original source materials: ancient literature, ranging from epic poems and legal documents to theatre plays and private letters. Open to the rich legacy of archaeology, art, architecture and material culture, you'll get to feel the past in your hands.

Relevant and alive today, ancient history makes us think about the present and look to the future in diverse and exciting ways. The impact of these ancient civilisations is still felt in the modern cultures of the world, shaping who we are today.

Ancient History BA

UCAS Code: V110

Our degree develops knowledge and critical understanding of the political, social, economic and cultural structures of ancient Near Eastern and Mediterranean societies.

You'll gain a grounding in the most influential periods and themes from antiquity and master the skills to investigate the past by building your degree around your interests.

Unusual in the UK, our programme also allows you to study Mesopotamia, the Levant, Egypt and North Africa and the empires of Persia and the Byzantium.

For us, social and cultural history is just as important as political history. You'll encounter fascinating themes with contemporary relevance, from warfare, gender, religion, art and literature to medicine and science. Particularly popular is the impact of antiquity on contemporary culture, from digital gaming to fashion and cinema.

Our degree is designed to help you cultivate the skills of the historian. You'll master assessing a range of evidence and evaluating varying and sometimes conflicting interpretations to construct your own robust arguments in innovative written forms – and verbally too.

Whether your interest lies in Homer or Herod, Babylon or Bacchus, Persia or Pericles, Cleopatra or Carthage – there's a whole world of antiquity waiting for you to explore.

Don't just take our word for it . . .

I had always been set on ancient history as my chosen subject. Cardiff University seemed the obvious choice for its location at first, but I soon found the variety and flexibility of the degree was too rich an opportunity to refuse.

The modules I enjoyed the most were those that examined individual aspects of Greek and Roman society in intense detail such as sexuality, culture, warfare and religion and those that covered lesser-known civilisations such as the Persians and Etruscans. These helped me see the ancient world in a completely different light.

Archaeology and Conservation

Revealing past human lives, preserving our cultural heritage.

Archaeology enables us to reveal past human lives. From diets and beliefs to the tools people used and the houses they lived in. Our specialist archaeological approaches are revealing more about how we have lived, changed, and left our mark on the world from millennia ago to the recent past.

Conservation investigates and preserves our cultural heritage objects, ensuring skilled and sympathetic care of heritage and cultural artefacts across the world.

Our experts bring their renowned expertise across a wide range of fields including bioarchaeology, conservation and prehistory, and early history into their teaching. We share our vast specialist knowledge of the archaeology of Britain, the Mediterranean and Europe and Roman Britain and medieval Europe. In conservation, we bring our expertise in the preservation of material objects into the classroom, from working on the smallest Egyptian papyrus fragment to large ships of historic importance like the SS Great Britain.

Fresh from our centenary, we are trailblazers outside of academia too. Our award-winning action in public engagement is setting the standard: from taking the past to thousands at UK festivals such as Glastonbury with Guerrilla Archaeology to the CAER Heritage Project, which is helping a community explore and celebrate its own past.

Our links across the heritage sector at home and overseas open up a wealth of real-world experience. This commitment means 8 weeks of fully funded archaeological fieldwork or heritage and museum placements in the UK or overseas, a stand-out undergraduate experience that distinguishes us from most comparable single honours degrees. Our BA and BSc degrees are accredited by the Chartered Institute for Archaeologists (CIfA), the professional body for archaeology in Britain.

Joint honours opportunities

We offer joint honours degrees, enabling you to combine archaeology with ancient history or history.

Reflecting dual studies, students studying these powerful combinations gain 4 weeks of fully funded fieldwork or placement over one summer. See page 6 for details.

Archaeology BA and BSc

UCAS Codes: F400 (BA); F402 (BSc)

Investigate the material remains of past societies and cultures, from earliest prehistory to the present day.

Archaeology is the study of the remains of past societies, from the tiny objects worn on the body to monumental complexes such as Stonehenge. Blending the sciences and humanities, archaeology equips you to better understand what it is to be human, allowing you to study humanity from the earliest hominids five million years ago to today.

Our degrees introduce you to the range of evidence studied by archaeologists; from landscapes, buildings and monuments to food remains and everyday objects.

You'll develop the specific skills required to study this varied evidence plus a broad knowledge of their wider context, preparing you for a career within archaeology, the heritage sector and beyond.

We focus on the development of your practical skills, both in the field and in the laboratory and you'll benefit from 8 weeks of fully funded archaeological fieldwork or work placements, in the UK and overseas.

Flexibility is built into our programmes, enabling you to tailor your studies around your interests, learning with experts undertaking cutting-edge research in a very wide range of periods and topics. We offer specialisms in the archaeology of the British Isles, Europe and the Mediterranean, including Egypt.

To pursue a degree focused on the science of investigation, we recommend considering our BSc degree.

Passionate about the past, we are proud to share our discipline. We teach from scratch, without expectation of previous study.

For full information including modules by year, please visit our website.

Don't just take our word for it . . .

As part of my undergraduate degree, I carried out a placement in commercial archaeology which allowed me to get a great idea of the world of archaeological work. I also earned a position in the university's internship scheme following my undergraduate degree. This allowed me to take part in the university's cutting-edge research in zooarchaeology and isotope analysis.

Conservation of Objects in Museums and Archaeology BSc

UCAS Code: F482

Focused on the study and preservation of cultural objects, our vocational programme is training the next generation of professionals to conserve our heritage.

Under expert tuition by internationally respected academics, you'll learn to co-ordinate the scientific investigation of artefacts. You'll study the structure, decay and conservation of cultural materials, progressing into practical work on a wide variety of archaeological and historical artefacts. By treating objects from museums, excavations and historic houses across the UK in our purpose-built laboratories, you develop a deeper understanding of their composition, technology and the methods used to conserve them.

Practical placements – in the UK and overseas

You'll also gain up to 8 weeks of placement in museums and cultural heritage projects in the UK and abroad. Recently, students have headed to the Museum of London, the Fitzwilliam Museum and Amgueddfa Cymru/Museum Wales, as well as overseas placements ranging from the Athenian Agora in Greece to the Field Museum in Chicago, USA.

For full information including modules by year, please visit our website.

History

Investigate past worlds and expand your understanding of historical change.

Cultivating intellectual curiosity, we are fascinated by the past and how it connects to the present.

Our historians will develop your critical understanding of many periods in history and support your efforts to understand unfamiliar and complex historical cultures.

We cover an impressive diversity of subject areas, chronological periods and approaches to the past, reflecting our expertise across a thousand years of global history right up to the 21st century; from Wales and Britain through to Africa and Eastern Europe; from Russia and North America through to Japan and China.

Delving into different time periods and places, you'll consider topical subjects like political change; the emergence of new states; the impact of climactic historical moments and the sweep of political, cultural, and social revolutions.

Beyond considering more traditional topics like European totalitarianism or the American Revolution, you can also explore exciting new approaches to the past including environmental history, gender history and digital history.

We are particularly interested in how people were not only affected by profound processes of change, but also how they helped shape these transformations. Along with our students, we strive to understand the experiences of ordinary people as well as those who occupied positions of power, be they revolutionaries, refugees, or citizens of developing states.

History BA

UCAS Code: V100

Highly regarded for its innovative teaching and geographical and chronological range, our exciting programme opens up a wide range of topic areas from a thousand years of global history.

Taught by leading historians, you can explore the history of societies in diverse parts of the globe.

Our challenging and rewarding degree will develop your skills as an independent thinker and learner, enabling you to research topics comprehensively and interpret original sources from a diversity of places and periods.

We are innovative in our approaches to and teaching of history, with strengths in areas including gender, class, transnational, environmental and digital histories.

Our research expertise both inspires and enriches our diverse teaching portfolio. From medieval manuscripts penned by monks and diplomats, through the letters of Shakespeare's contemporaries to the material objects deployed by modern political activists, our teaching is alive with the sources we encounter in our own research.

Our specialisms include the United States, Germany, Russia, Eastern Europe, France, Britain, Wales, India, and China.

Writing your own history

By your final year, under the guidance of an expert in the field, you'll be ready to research, construct and present findings to an historical problem of your devising in your own dissertation.

For full information including modules by year, please visit our website.

Don't just take our word for it . . .

Every member of academic staff is extremely knowledgeable and helpful. The course offers a great degree of flexibility over content so you can really tailor your degree. I found that topics I would have previously dismissed turned out to be the most enjoyable.

Religion

Welcome to the study of humanity.

The study of religion explores the motivations that have driven civilisations, shaped history, and continue to impact the world around us, individually and globally.

Headlines today continue to feature the big questions about how we choose to live our lives, what it means to be human, the impact of religion in everyday life, and recognise the major part that religious faith – and the many religious faiths – play in the world.

Studying with us, you'll explore historic and contemporary religions. But unlike many universities, you'll study across and beyond the major world faiths, such as Native American and Native African religions, as well as the concept of religion itself.

You'll learn how a society isn't necessarily more or less religious, but rather how people understand and engage with religion as an idea varies. You'll consider individual piety and the role of community. You'll also have opportunities to work with new languages, undertake fieldwork, or pursue study in an area you find personally interesting.

We take a multi-discipline approach, bringing expertise that reflects historical, sociological, theological and textual perspectives, giving you a broad range of applications and skillsets as you embark on your career after university.

Joint honours opportunities

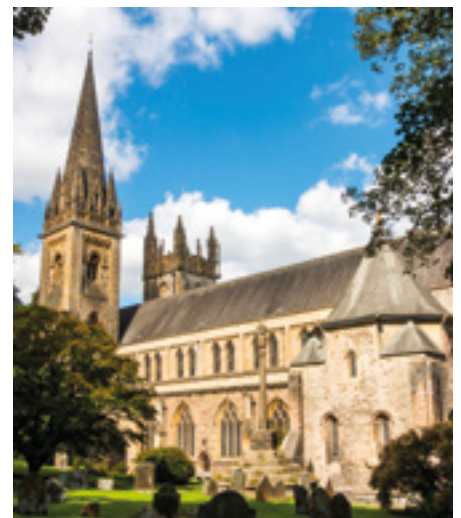

We offer joint honours degrees, enabling you to combine religious studies and philosophy. See page 6 for details.

Year of study abroad

We offer opportunities to enhance your degree with an additional year of study abroad. See page 8 for details.

Religion and Theology BA

UCAS Code: V6V6

Together, we explore the histories, cultures, and beliefs of major and lesser-known religious traditions.

We consider the history and belief systems of religious traditions, investigating diverse questions that remain hotly debated today. Our modules open up these contemporary themes, from religious identity in modern societies and religion and the media to the ethics that shape our views of topics from the environment to sexuality and reproductive rights.

You'll become adept in observing religious practices sensitively, learning to scrutinise intriguing sources from material objects to visual media like film created by religious groups.

You have the freedom to tailor your programme, combining thematic, sociological, anthropological, linguistic, and historical approaches. You also choose from a variety of approaches and research specialisms across and beyond Buddhism, Christianity, Hinduism, and Islam.

Unusually, you also can study ancient languages to better appreciate key religious texts such as the Quran, the Bible, and the Bhagavad Gita.

Whatever your interests, our leading academics - all inspiringly passionate about their subjects - bring up-to-the-minute thinking and research into every module.

“Don't just take our word for it . . .

What I loved most was the opportunity to study such a diverse range of religions and subjects. What gives Cardiff the real edge are the teaching staff. I'd really recommend throwing yourself in and get involved in anything you can.
